2017 Reunion: Sun & Fun in Arizona!

EMBASSY SUITES PHOENIX-SCOTTSDALE
AUGUST 15-20, 2017

The state motto of Arizona is Ditat Deus, which means God enriches. Photos of Arizona (like the one above) do seem proof that God has blessed Arizona abundantly. Fortunately, he has also blessed Arizona with air-conditioning. Because Arizona in August is hot! But not to worry...we'll stay cool and enjoy off-season rates at the Embassy Suites.

Jean and Bill Steed have been working all winter to plan a fabulous reunion. Reminder: they are both Marines. So you know it will be organized, outstanding, and fun! All of the main events will be at the beautiful Embassy Suites, which is just 20 minutes from the Phoenix Sky Harbor Airport. How cool is that?

See pages 2, 12-16, and 27-28 for more about the 2017 Reunion.

My Time as a Marine — The Battle of Chosin Reservoir

SIXTH OF A SERIES BY WATSON CRUMBIE (29th MAR-1-C)

What is now known as “The Most Epic Battle in Marine Corps History” began on the night of 27 November 1950 when Chinese Communist Forces (CCF) attacked all UN Forces in North Korea. We now faced a new war against a new and powerful enemy. Ten Chinese divisions surrounded and were ready to destroy the isolated outposts of Marines one by one. Our survival, as well as most UN forces in North Korea, was suddenly in jeopardy!

I was with the Marines at Yudam-ni, which was the furthest the Marines advanced into North Korea, when the Chinese suddenly appeared and surrounded all UN Forces in North Korea. Their orders were to annihilate the 1st Marine Division to the last man. They were seasoned combat troops, having fought the Japanese, as well as the Nationalists in the recent civil war.

Around 10:00 p.m. on 27 November, we saw flares and heard bugles and whistles. The Marines inflicted heavy casualties upon the waves of attacking Chinese, but Marine casualties were also great – more than 500 wounded were brought into our area the first night. We cared for some of them in tents, but others had to stay outside in sleeping bags where the temperature had dropped to 30 degrees below zero. Blood froze, which prevented many wounded Marines from bleeding to death, but blood plasma also froze. Corpsmen thawed morphine vials in their mouth. The Chinese attack was such a surprise that many Marines were bayoneted in their sleeping bags – moisture from their breath had frozen the zippers.

Ridge Runner

The attack was stopped just 200 yards from our artillery battery. We loaded several hundred wounded and dead onto vehicles and formed a convoy. I became a “ridge runner” walking the ridge

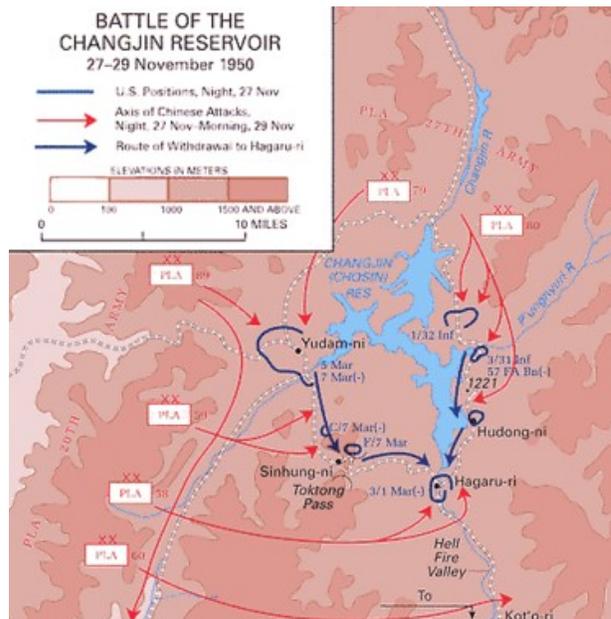

Marines on the west side of the reservoir as the Chinese general had planned. Their intelligence forces were not aware that the 5th Regiment had joined forces with those on the west side and were thus a greater force than the general had expected.

Artillery to Infantry

Instead of being home for Christmas, as General McArthur had promised, our survival – as well as that of most UN forces in North Korea – was suddenly in jeopardy. We were at risk of annihilation! An order was issued for all units to provide men for the infantry. The even numbered gun crews from Love Battery were selected. I was on gun number one. We found we could only man four of the six guns.

The “cannon-infantry” men were sent to the top of Hill 1542, which commanded the road below, the road that was vital to our escape. The lieutenant in charge remained in a warm tent at the base of the hill, leaving Sgt. Jim Johnson to command the unit designated as Jig Company 7th Marine Regiment.

Around 4:30 a.m., a large force of Chinese wearing U.S. Marine parkas attacked Jig Company. The Marines held their fire, not knowing who they were until they were upon them. That was when they discovered that their carbines would not fire in such cold weather. Several Marines were killed and the unit was in danger of being overrun when Sgt. Johnson, realizing the situation was hopeless, gathered all to guard the convoy from an enemy flank attack. I picked up a Garand M-1 rifle, a reliable weapon which had been left by a wounded or dead Marine. How I must have looked wearing a cartridge belt with ten clips (eight bullets each) of ammunition around my waist and a bandolier with another ten clips over each shoulder, plus four hand grenades dangling from my chest! That alone should have scared the bravest Chinese soldier.

My Time as a Marine

the grenades. While he held off the attacking enemy, he ordered a withdrawal of the remaining force. He was last seen alive in hand to hand combat. For his actions in saving so many lives, he received the Medal of Honor posthumously.

Our howitzers had to fire at a very high angle due to the short distance to the target. It was probably the highest angle ever fired by a 155mm howitzer. Several howitzers were damaged when in recoil they hit the frozen ground. We found it necessary to somehow dig or blast a "recoil pit." It was probably the first time in Marine Corps history.

We fired on villages to the north occupied by the Chinese, but with no visibility, results were unknown. After we fired the last of our ammunition, we hitched the guns to the prime movers and became infantrymen.

Frozen

Twice I encountered a group of Chinese soldiers barely visible in the falling snow. I fired a clip (eight bullets) at them, but I was unable to keep them in sight, and they did not return fire. It was difficult walking the steep banks in the deep snow and my frozen feet were in extreme pain. Our boots were made of rubber, totally inadequate for such cold. They had half-inch-thick felt insoles to absorb perspiration. The insoles froze, and it was like walking barefoot on ice. Whenever possible, I tried to dry out the felt insoles, each time cracking ice or frozen perspiration from my toes. Our breath and tears froze. All who served at Chosin suffer from long term cold injury, including nerve damage and pain that intensifies with age.

Toktong Pass

Seven miles south of Yudam-ni was Toktong, a vital mountain pass which was held by Fox Company of the 7th Marines. It was commonly called "Fox Hill." Surrounded, the only way Fox Company could be supplied was by air drop. Several times the parachutes drifted into Chinese territory. Fortunately, one battery of 105mm howitzers in Hagaru-ri could support them by firing maximum range.

Fox Company was unable to treat or evacuate their wounded. Since they could not dig foxholes in the frozen ground, they stacked dead Chinese like sandbags for protection. They decimated almost an entire Chinese division while holding the pass, until a force from Yudam-ni was able to reach them. Guided only by the stars at night and a compass during the day, a relief column led by Lt. Col. Ray Davis marched through waist-deep snow around the back side of the mountains until they reached Fox Hill. The road from Yudam-ni was then cleared by taking the hills on each side of the road.

With the road cleared, our convoy left Yudam-ni on 1 December and arrived at the pass a few hours later. We loaded the wounded and dead aboard trucks. It was one of the most difficult things I have ever done. The dead bodies were frozen in the position in which they died.

Reluctantly, I gave my sleeping bag to a wounded Marine. There would be little chance for me to sleep anyway until we reached Hagaru-ri. We would fall asleep walking and wander off the road, or doze off in the middle of a sentence while talking. I would sit on my helmet, which had a round bottom, and as I fell asleep I would fall over and wake up. While asleep, I would feel warm and totally at peace; I believe that is how it feels just before you freeze to death.

On to Hagaru-ri

From Toktong Pass it was about eight miles to Hagaru-ri at the base of the reservoir. Five inches of new snow had fallen. The Chinese had destroyed all the bridges and blown out sections of the mountain road. The narrow road was a sheet of ice. Again, I became a ridge runner to protect the convoy from ambush. There were times that I could not walk the flanks due to the terrain and had to walk the road. I remember a Chinese heavy machine gun firing at me from across a valley. I could see that his bullets were hitting the snow bank over my head, but I was too exhausted to care, so I continued to walk while he kept firing, never realizing that his sights were off.

We lost one truck when it slipped off the icy road and down a steep hill side. We had to burn it to destroy what we could not salvage. One truck loaded with wounded that was pulling a trailer loaded with wounded slid over the side and down a steep embankment in the middle of the night killing several of the wounded. They had to be brought back up to the road and placed wherever there was a place in the convoy, such as on a hood or fender or even on top of other wounded.

As we moved, I found myself near the end of the column. This is where the howitzers were – to prevent them from blocking the road if they became disabled. About midnight, just short of Hagaru-ri, some of the prime movers (tractors) pulling our guns ran out of diesel fuel, creating a gap in the column and the opportunity the Chinese had been waiting for.

First, they knocked out a tank from Hagaru-ri that had been sent to assist us at a bridge over an inlet, effectively blocking the road. The tank was burning, and ammunition was exploding. The flames cast a glow to the advantage of the Chinese. They went after the howitzers, firing at the tractor drivers and into the radiators. I was blinded by the flash of my first shot and I could only fire into the darkness where I thought the Chinese were. We killed several Chinese, but we also suffered casualties. I left our tractor driver for dead in the roadside ditch, but he showed up later in not much of a forgiving mood. I still bear a feeling of guilt for this.

We had to abandon nine guns by pushing them off the road. Then to reach Hagaru-ri, we had to run past the exploding tank. At first light, the British 41 Commando tried to retrieve the howitzers, but the Chinese drove them back. Army fighter planes attempted to drop napalm on them but missed. The Chinese now had nine of our eighteen 155mm howitzers, including my gun and all of my possessions.

Going back to the evening of 27 November, the Army 31st Regimental Combat Team relieved the 5th Marines on the east side of the reservoir, which allowed the 5th Marines to join the 7th Marines on the west side of the reservoir. A large force of Chinese attacked the Army units on the east, and for several days the Army engaged the Chinese force that would have otherwise been available to attack Hagaru-ri. In my opinion, this effectively kept the Chinese from seizing Hagaru-ri before the Marines from Yudam-ni were able to get there, and the Chinese were prevented from achieving their strategic objective to trap and annihilate all UN forces at Chosin.

Task Force Faith

The Army was ordered to form a force to fight their way to Hagaru-ri. Known as Task Force Faith, after Lt. Col. Don Faith, they loaded their wounded aboard trucks and decided to run the road blocks to reach Hagaru-ri. The lead truck was knocked out at the first road block, effectively blocking the road. The trucks that followed, which were carrying the wounded, attempted to go around it but were stopped. The Chinese converged on the trucks, machine gunned them, and set them on fire.

An attempt by Army tanks from Hagaru-ri to reinforce Task Force Faith had been turned back, and the Army unit that Task Force Faith was expecting to meet up with at Hudong-ni was not there. It had been withdrawn earlier to help reinforce Hagaru-ri.

Task Force Faith was effectively defeated, and each man was on his own. They were forced to abandon everything, including quad 50 caliber machine guns and twin 40mm anti-aircraft guns that had been extremely effective against the Chinese. About 400 able-bodied men and 1,500 wounded drifted into Hagaru-ri a few at a time. They either walked through the hills in waist-deep snow or over the frozen reservoir. Lt. Col. Faith was not among them.

Task Force Drysdale

Hagaru-ri was badly in need of reinforcements to hold until the Marines from Yudam-ni arrived. In a desperate attempt to help, a task force from Koto-ri, some ten miles south, was ordered to attack north to Hagaru-ri. Named Task Force Drysdale after the British commander of the Royal Marines, it was made up of the British 41 Commando and elements of the 1st Marine Regiment. They managed to reach a point half way between Hagaru-ri and Koto-ri where – at what was to become known as Hell Fire Valley – the Chinese ambushed the force, killing and wounding a large number. Numerous vehicles, including tanks, were destroyed and blocked the road, most in a jumbled heap. Some Marines ran out of ammunition, and the Chinese took them prisoner. Drysdale radioed General Smith at Hagaru-ri of the situation. He asked if he should turn back or try to get through with the remaining force. General Smith's orders were to continue the attack "at all costs," which they did. Of the 900 who left Koto-ri, 400 made it to Hagaru-ri

Attack on Hagaru-ri

The Chinese had broken thru the defense perimeter of Hagaru-ri the night before we arrived from Yudam-ni, but they were driven back by a counterattack. Hagaru-ri was in danger of being overrun a second time, which would have proved fatal. That's when 2nd Lieutenant Dick Carey sent out two South Koreans in Chinese uniforms to mingle with the Chinese in an attempt to find out where and when the next attack on Hagaru-ri would take place. They returned with the information, and the perimeter was reinforced. The Chinese attack came at the place they had determined, but it was off by one hour. Lt. Carey took a lot of kidding for failing to find out if the Chinese were on daylight savings time.

In the attack, the Chinese suffered heavy casualties and were unable to penetrate the reinforced defense. The intelligence probably saved Hagaru-ri and the lives of thousands of Marines. However, Hagaru-ri would still be extremely vulnerable until the Marines from Yudam-ni arrived.

Magnificent Bastards

The first contingent of Marines from Yudam-ni reached Hagaru-ri about 9:00 p.m. on 3 December. We arrived with 1,500 dead and wounded. It had taken 59 hours for the lead column to travel the 14 miles from Yudam-ni. All who could walk – including the wounded – were formed up. To the cadence of feet crunching in the snow, we marched into Hagaru-ri singing the Marine Corps Hymn! The battalion surgeon shouted, "Look at those bastards, those Magnificent Bastards!" They were as glad to see us as we were to be there. By joining forces, it greatly increased our odds of survival.

On 3 December, the cooks at Hagaru-ri provided hot pancakes and hot coffee around the clock. It was practically the only real food or liquid we would have for thirteen days until we reached the seaport of Hungnam.

We found a supply of 155mm ammunition which we fired with our remaining guns until it was depleted, and we became infantry again. A request for mortar ammunition was made using the code word "TOOTSIEROLL." The Army Air Force in Japan did not realize that it was a code. Instead of mortar ammunition, C-119's flew low overhead and showered us with Tootsie Rolls! These Tootsie Rolls, which we thawed in our mouths, became the nourishment that saved our lives! Tootsie Rolls are to be found everywhere at our reunions. A representative of the company attends most of them.

Our engineers had chiseled a rough airstrip on the frozen ground at Hagaru-ri, and this was used to evacuate more than 6,000 wounded and fly in more than 500 replacements. With reinforcements flown in, I once again became an infantryman. Our next task was to fight our way to Koto-ri, some ten miles distant. Once we reached Koto-ri, we would have to fight another thirty-seven miles to Chinhung-ni, which was held by the Third Army Division to protect the port of Hungnam. There the navy had assembled a fleet of transports waiting to evacuate us, should we make it.

During the ten miles to Koto-ri, we had to fight through eleven roadblocks. I remember passing through Hell Fire Valley where Task Force Drysdale had been ambushed. It was in the middle of the night with a bright moon and large snowflakes floating gently down in total silence. Burned tanks, trucks, and other vehicles were piled high in a draw and covered with snow, creating a ghostly scene. We loaded the dead onto trucks and continued to fight our way through nine more roadblocks to Koto-ri. The lead elements reached Koto-ri on 9 December. Our chance of survival increased with each step.

Jangjin (Chosin) Reservoir Battle Monument To Be Dedicated on May 3

After more than four years of fundraising ($700,000), contracting, and construction by a great team, the Chosin Few Battle Monument has been completed. I am the Chairman of this project. [See pictures below and right.]

The Monument sits on a prime site along the memorial walkway at the National Museum of the Marine Corps in Quantico, VA. The eight bronze plaques on the sides of the octagon-shaped monument describe each phase of the battle from Yudam-ni to the Treadway Bridge at Funchilin Pass. Shining brightly above at a height of fifteen feet is the Star of Koto-ri.

The dedication of the Memorial will take place on 3 May 2017 at 1500 hours. General Joseph Dunford, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, will speak. Unfortunately I will not be able to attend due to respiratory problems. But it gives me great satisfaction to know that although it took five years, we have created a memorial that will preserve the history of the Korean War for future generations.

Musings from Jack Lynch

Dear Flo,

Here is my check for the newsletter. Please use what's left for those Gyrenes who need some help with their subscriptions.

Got a call on Christmas from a niece who said that she had PTSD after going through a divorce. I told her, at the risk of hurting her feelings, "You having PTSD is absurd. Your great uncle Pfc Lester Owen, who you never met, certainly had it. What would you expect to bring back from the battles of Tarawa, Saipan and Okinawa? She replied that she didn't believe war was the way to resolve disputes between countries. I said, "It's a good thing for you that everyone doesn't think that way or we would all be slaves speaking Japanese! Merry Christmas."

Retired Marine Generals "Mad Dog" Mattis and John Kelly are going to Washington to assume cabinet level positions with the incoming administration. "Stand by! The Marines have landed and the situation is well in hand." May I offer just one suggestion? Wear your body armor, especially on the back. The inside-the-beltway boys are busy sharpening their knives as I write this. What do you think, Striking Sixth family? Will Marine honor, loyalty and integrity overcome political skullduggery? I, for one, pray that it will.

I have been listening to some of the CDs Uncle Lester left when he passed in 2004 including "The Complete Glenn Miller" and a CD by Tommy Dorsey. I think I am getting hooked on Big Band music. Try it, you'll like it.

A Marine Colonel was inspecting his Marines in the field. He came upon one of his men who was wearing a rather worn and frayed field jacket. "Marine," he asked, "Can you tell me why you wear such a frayed field jacket?" "Yes, sir, I can," he replied. The colonel asked, "Well, what is it?" "Sir, this here field jacket I am wearing ain't 'fraida nuthin!"

As Gunny Ermey would say, "Semper Fi – Carry on!"

RIP Lorenzo "Lester" Forgit

It is with a heavy heart that I notify you of the passing of Lorenzo Forgit (29th Mar-HQ-Band). I have had a special place in my heart for Marines ever since I began doing research for the website I set up to honor my Grandfather who served in the Sixth Marine Division.

One day a very kind and friendly gentlemen walked up to my bank teller window. He was wearing a jacket with the Sixth Marine Division Insignia.

I stopped what I was doing and asked, "Did you serve in the Sixth Marine Division, sir?" He paused and said "Why yes, how did you know?" I told him about my search for information about the Grandfather I never knew. After finishing his transaction, he proudly smiled and wished me well with a God bless. I took the opportunity to write down his address from the transaction slip he gave me, and I proceeded to mail him a copy of the Sixth Marine Division newsletter. I offered my assistance in any way, such as having his medals reissued or connecting him with lost service buddies.

A couple of days later I received an inter-department package at work from someone in my company. I opened it and there was a letter from Les saying how pleased he was to have met me and thanking me for sending the newsletter. He wrote that he used to play the bugle with the 29th Marines HQ Band and was in the Merchant Marines before that. He was eager to correspond more and mentioned that two of his daughters worked within my company so we could save postage expense.

I assisted with getting his medals reissued, and I purchased a subscription for the Sixth Marine Division for him. The day he received his medals, he came in to my workplace with tears in his eyes, thanking me for my hard work. He told me I was a special person and presented me with his Sixth Marine Division pin. With a hug and tears in my eyes, I said to him, "Semper Fi."

That day a friendship was born. We continued to correspond with cards on holidays including Memorial Day and Veterans Day, always with a warm "Semper Fi."

Les lived and loved the USMC. On the Marine Corps birthday he would celebrate at the local VFW with a pancake breakfast. He was loved by everyone in town. I cared about him and respected him like he was my Grandfather.

Semper Fi,
Karen Hayes-Levine

Say Hello to Colin Loflin

Colin Loflin and his friend David Tyler at the 2016 Accomac, VA Independence Day parade

April 1 is a memorable date for all Okinawa combat veterans. Not only was April 1, 1945 Easter Sunday, it was also Love Day of Operation ICEBERG. And for Sgt Colin Loflin, April Fool's Day 1945 was particularly special because it was his 27th birthday. Colin enlisted in the Marine Corps in 1942 and was assigned to B Company, 1st Battalion, 22d Marines. He was a native of Virginia's Eastern Shore and resides there still with his wife Bobbie. Although his physical condition has declined recently, his intellect remains sharp, and his memories vivid. Like most combat veterans he is guarded in discussing his combat experiences, but on one special occasion he quietly and humbly said to me, "David, I was a damn good scout, and I always tried to take care of my men." I am honored to be his friend. Colin can be reached by email at dt Tyler4@cox.net.

Bryce Hill Jr. and Charlie Stringham, August 2016

Hello again Flo,

I'm getting sad reporting all of these passings of Dad and his friends. Charlie Stringham passed away on March 1, 2017. I know his wife Louie passed away not long ago, so I didn't know if anyone else in his family would report it to the Association.

Dad and Charlie had a great visit last August, and I'm attaching a picture of them. [See above.] Great guys.

Thanks,

Missing Newsletter

Dear Flo,

I received the newsletter and noticed that Andy's name was not in Taps.

Andrew Horvath, 15th Mar-3-I
March 6, 1922 – Dec. 18, 2015

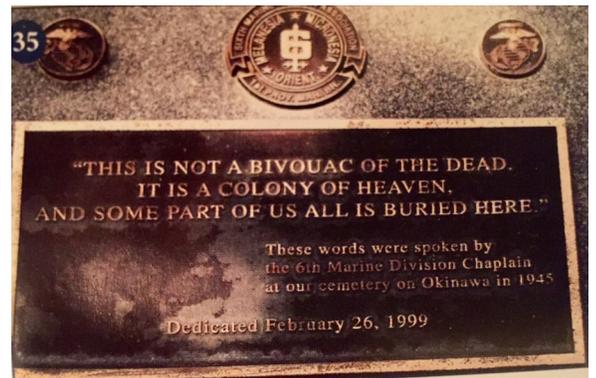

Andy was President of the Association 1997-1998. During that time he saw to it that the Sixth Marine Division Memorial was placed in the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific (aka the Punchbowl) in Hawaii. [See photo below.] It is really a beautiful place.

Before his passing, we hadn't been able to attend many reunions and we hadn't been receiving any newsletters – Andy really missed them. I am enclosing a check for $20 toward the cost.

Hope you are doing well. God bless you always.

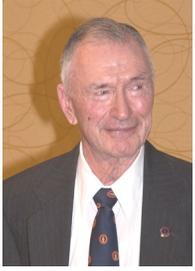

With love,
Anne Horvath

Note from the Membership Manager:
The reason you missed Andy's name in Taps is because it was in the Spring 2016 issue, which you did not receive. I am sending you a copy of that newsletter.

Chaplain's Report

I'm okay for 90, but I have trouble with my balance at times on steps. I still play golf with my 91-year old brother who was in the second wave at Iwo Jima.

Don Honis's daughter, Heidi, called to say Don had died. He had gone to the VA for something minor, come home, and then he died unexpectedly. Now we need another "bell ringer" at the next reunion, which I am looking forward to.

Keep the commandments, say your prayers, read the Scriptures and don't do or say dumb things. And remember who is really in charge of this world.

From the Editor

When Bob got out of the Marine Corps in 1976, we decided to take all the money we had to drive across the country. Our goal was to see as many national parks as we could plus, of course, Hollywood and Disneyland. We had never been west of Ohio, so it was quite an adventure.

One of the parks we visited was the magnificent Grand Canyon. But I don't remember much about it. While we were there, Bob and I had an argument (about what, I have no recollection), and all I remember is being mad! Fortunately, the argument was over by the time we moved on to Utah. But I have always wanted to go back and see the Grand Canyon in a happier frame of mind.

This year — forty-two years later — we're finally going to do it!

The Grand Canyon is only four hours from Phoenix, so we are heading out a week before the reunion to see it, along with some of the other sights in Arizona. There is a lot to see!

Before I started researching the area, I thought Arizona consisted of Phoenix, the Grand Canyon, and an endless boring desert. You know, just a bunch of sand. Was I ever wrong! Arizona has some of the most stunning scenery and interesting formations of any state in the union. We are really excited to see what we can.

We are also really excited for another Sixth Marine Division reunion. I hope you are too. And if you can, consider coming early or staying late and seeing some of beautiful Arizona.

~ Carroll McGowan

p.s. Every Marine passing saddens me, and Don Honis is no exception. Bob and I are so grateful we were on the same flight with Don and his daughter Heidi and son-in-law Adam when we came back from Oklahoma last year. It gave us a chance to spend a little more time with him. Plus we got to hear the pilot announce that there was a World War II Marine who fought on Okinawa on board the plane. Along with everyone else, we applauded enthusiastically! That was special. ♥

2016 Annual Meeting Minutes

Scholarship Committee:

Bob McGowan reported that four students received Sixth Marine Division Association scholarships of $2,500 each for 2016-17. There were two additional applications that were incomplete due to issues with missing DD214s. Bob resolved this with the CEO of the Marine Corps Scholarship Foundation so it should not be a problem going forward.

Bob also reported that there is $390 left in the scholarship fund, and therefore, the Association must decide if we should donate additional funds for scholarships.

Carroll McGowan reviewed the Association's financial position. She said the Association currently has about $30,000 in the treasury. Yearly expenses include $3,000 for the Membership Manager, $1,500 for the newsletter (dues for subscriptions less costs), $1,000 for the reunion (the Association picks up some of the expenses to keep costs down for attendees), and $500 in misc. At this rate, we have enough funds to cover expenses for approximately five years. Carroll also noted that we need to have enough funds to cover upfront deposits for the reunion venues. Based on these numbers, she believes the most we should consider donating to the scholarship fund is $5,000, which would cover two scholarships for 2017-18.

There was a lengthy discussion about reducing expenses in order to fund more scholarships. For example, we could lower the cost of the newsletter by reducing the number of pages, eliminating color pages, or e-mailing the newsletter. We could also look at scaling back the reunions or eliminating Association subsidiaries. Marty Gromley stated – to much applause – that the Sixth Marine Division Association is for the Marines first and foremost. He said he is not against scholarships, but we should not lower the quality of the newsletter or the reunions to fund scholarships.

It was also pointed out that the number of students applying for scholarships will continue to decline as only children and grandchildren of Sixth Marine Division veterans are eligible.

George McAfee made the following motion, which was seconded by Kathy Schadt:

The Sixth Marine Division Association will continue to support the Scholarship Fund for next year (2017-18) at an amount to be determined. The votes were 13 in favor and 24 opposed. Motion defeated.

Finance Committee:

Connie Houseweart reported the committee met pursuant to Article X (9) of the Bylaws of the Association. The books were reviewed and the committee finds that the financial records and reports are in order.

ELECTIONS:

Officers:

President Houseweart asked if there were any other nominations for officers from the floor. There were none.

Sam Petriello, seconded by Marty Gromley, moved to close the nominations and cast a vote for the slate of officers presented by the Nominating Committee. All in favor, motion carried.

The following were elected officers for 2016-17:

President Elect –	Connie Houseweart
Secretary –	Lisa Benedetti
Treasurer –	Sharon Woodhouse
Chaplain –	Harry McKnight
Editor –	Carroll McGowan
Judge Advocate –	Bob McGowan
Membership Chairman –	Jim White
Public Relations –	Jim Monbeck
Service Officer –	Vacant

Unit Directors:

President Houseweart reviewed the current Unit Directors and asked if there were volunteers for any of the vacant positions.

Sharon Woodhouse, seconded by Ken Wells, moved to vote for the following Unit Directors. All in favor; motion carried.

Unit Directors Elected for 2016-17:

4 th Marines	George Scott
15 th Marines	Sam Petriello*
22 nd Marines	Alio Benedetti
29 th Marines	Neal McCallum

New directors for 2016-2017*

2017 Nominating Committee:

President Houseweart asked for nominations of two members at large to serve on the Nominating Committee for 2017.

Patty Payne and Marty Gromley were elected to the Nominating Committee for 2017.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS: None.

NEW BUSINESS:

Ladies Auxiliary:

Barb McKnight reported that the Ladies Auxiliary voted to disband at its meeting earlier in the day. Since the Ladies can now vote in the Association (approved at the 2015 annual meeting), there is no longer a need for a separate ladies group. The ladies voted to transfer the monies remaining in their treasury to the Sixth Marine Division Association. Barb noted that the ladies will continue the tradition of having a ladies lunch at future reunions.

Honorary Membership:

Sam Petriello said the Association would like to make Karen Kelly an honorary member and cited her work with Pam Bloustine on the 2016 reunion. This was approved. Sam also thanked Pam and Joan Willauer for hosting the reunion.

Presentations for Reunion 2017:

Sharon Woodhouse made a proposal to hold the 2017 reunion in Quantico. The Holiday Inn in Quantico (where the 2013 and 2014 reunions were held) has again offered a rate of $99.00 with 13% tax for September 19-24, 2017. All events, including the banquet, would be held at the hotel, with the exception of the Memorial Service, which would be held at the Museum Chapel. Events would include a barbecue on the hotel patio and a chorale program. The Association would hire a bus to take everyone to the chapel for the Memorial Service, and also to make trips to the museum on one of the days. The possibility of a field trip to 8th and I in Washington D.C. will also be explored.

Barb McKnight asked if the date could be changed to August to accommodate teachers. Sharon said the Holiday Inn did not have any available dates in August.

Pam Bloustine said she would like to see the 2017 reunion on the west coast so it would be easier for Association members from western states to attend. Connie asked if there were any proposals for the west coast. Jean Steed said she and her husband Bill would be willing to host a reunion in Scottsdale, Arizona. She did not have any specifics, but she said that the June to September time period would work best since hotel rates are low then. She acknowledged that it would be hot, but pointed out that everything is air conditioned in Arizona.

There was a lengthy discussion about whether or not it would be appropriate to vote for a reunion site without details or dates. Some argued that the hotel and room rates should be provided before the vote. The Bylaws were reviewed, and there is no stipulation regarding what must be in a reunion proposal. Some members felt Jean should do more research and come back with more specifics. Ken Wells suggested letting the Board decide on the reunion site once Jean had the details, but some board members indicated they were reluctant to make that decision for the membership. It was noted that there is no way to poll members outside of the annual meeting.

Tiffany Leggett, seconded by Ken Wells, moved that members vote on the two proposals on the floor.

A show of hands was taken for each proposal and Scottsdale (22) was chosen as the 2017 reunion site over Quantico (15).

Chaplain Harry McKnight gave the benediction.

From the Historian's Corner

THE FOUR FREEDOMS

Whether called public relations, self-promotion or propaganda, the value of communicating U.S. war aims during the Second World War cannot be understated. Especially in this global conflict, which required the involvement of all its citizenry, the ability to convince them that what they were doing was in everyone's best interest was crucial. The sacrifice and collaboration of citizens was unlike anything we have seen before or since. Although propaganda impacted the fighting men, it affected citizenry on the home front and galvanized them into being an important front for the war effort.

In the United States an example of the effective use of communications was a campaign known as the Four Freedoms campaign. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt was a gifted communicator. On January 6, 1941, he addressed Congress, delivering the historic "Four Freedoms" speech. At a time when Western Europe lay under Nazi domination, Roosevelt presented a vision in which the American ideals of individual liberties were extended throughout. He presented a picture of war aims to which every American could relate. One of the Americans who was listening to that speech, and who was greatly moved by it, was Norman Rockwell. He would spend the next six months painting his vision of the ideals Roosevelt talked about, creating four oil paintings, each 45.75 inches × 35.5 inches.

Rockwell originally offered the paintings to the government to use in a public relations campaign, but he was rejected. Eventually in 1943, the Saturday Evening Post, one of the most popular magazines of the time, published the paintings accompanied by articles by some of the premier thinkers of the time. Rockwell's sentimental depictions of Roosevelt's abstract concepts became widely popular across America and made people think about who we were as Americans.

Following this, the U.S. government undertook a highly successful war bond campaign using Rockwell's paintings. They toured all over the country, and the campaign raised more than $132 million for the war effort.

For people all over the world these ideals were easy to understand. Their concepts were included in the Atlantic Charter and part of the charter for the United Nations. As a propaganda tool during World War II, they were an effective apparatus for fund raising and for articulating the reasons why some things are worth fighting for, despite the cost.

These iconic paintings transcend time and place and continue to illustrate the resolve that Americans showed in defense of ideals that were more valuable than themselves.

HORSESHOE AND HALF MOON HILLS

When discussing the Sixth Division on Okinawa, much attention is given to Sugar Loaf Hill and folding the twelve-mile Shuri-Yonabaru line from 12-19 May 1945. Far less attention is given to the two other hills that were part of that sector and that also needed to be taken to successfully fold the Shuri Line. Those two hills – Half Moon and Horseshoe – also faced withering fire during the same period. Although Sugar Loaf may have been the “spearhead,” as James Hallas points out in Killing Ground on Okinawa, Half Moon and Horseshoe served as the base. The terrain and fortifications and how they were taken – by sure Marine determination – would become part of Marine Corps lore. The whole corridor created difficulties that were almost unimaginable:

“The sharp depression included within the Horseshoe afforded mortar positions that were almost inaccessible to any arm short of direct, aimed rifle fire and hand grenades. Any attempt to capture Sugar Loaf by flanking action from east or west is immediately exposed to flat trajectory fire from both of the supporting terrain features. Likewise, an attempt to reduce either the Horseshoe or the Half Moon would be exposed to destructive, well-aimed fire from Sugar Loaf itself. In addition, the three localities are connected by a network of tunnels and galleries, facilitating the covered movement of reserves. As a final factor in the strength of the position it will be seen that all sides of Sugar Loaf Hill are precipitous, and there are no evident avenues of approach into the hill mass. For strategic location and tactical strength, it is hard to conceive of a more powerful position than the Sugar Loaf terrain afforded. Added to all the foregoing was the bitter fact that troops assaulting this position presented a clear target to enemy machine guns, mortars, and artillery emplaced on the Shuri heights to their left and left rear.”

The goal was to attack an area between Shuri and Naha that was a “1,000-yard-wide corridor.” Then the Marines were to head south and east and encircle Shuri castle. The Sixth and First Marine Divisions would be given this task. The area was defended by about 2,500 men of Colonel Seiko Mita's 15th Independent Infantry Regiment and other attached units. The Japanese soldiers were dug in and had created almost a “perfect static defense.” Additionally, for years the area between Shuri Castle and the sea had been home to artillery units, and they had every inch of the ground sited in. They knew how to turn it into a meat grinder, and that is exactly what they did.

The starting place for some of the Sixth Division's assault up the Shuri valley began on Charlie Hill, which was far more imposing than Sugar Loaf. In fact, Sugar Loaf was so small it did not appear on U.S. topographical maps. Before the war, it had been a popular picnic spot for Okinawans. The Japanese called it Hill 51.2 The point of attack forward, for much of the 29th Regiment, was to be Half Moon. Half Moon, named for its shape, was also called Crescent Hill; it was a quarter mile southeast of Sugar Loaf. The other hill in this mutual supporting triad was Horseshoe, which was less than 200 yards south of Sugar Loaf and was also referred to as Kings Hill. The sharp depression within the Horseshoe afforded mortar positions that were almost inaccessible.

The problem with taking these hills was the withering interlocking fire the Japanese were raining down on the attempted Marine advance. The men trying to advance on Half Moon were bombarded from caves; on the south slope, mortar fire, small arms and machine gun fire kept them pinned down. However, securing Half Moon and Horseshoe were key to being able to take Sugar Loaf. The next few days would involve continued attempts and withdrawals, with 16 May being the worst day of the assault of the Shuri Line. Yet by the next morning, a large portion of Half Moon was held by Marines, and this gave the Marines on Sugar Loaf some relief from the withering fire that had previously rained down on them. On 18 May, a diversionary attack on both Half Moon and Horseshoe drew much of the enemy fire away. This allowed a force of tanks and infantry to rush around the hill's left flank, attack Sugar Loaf from the rear, and rout the remaining defenders so they were forced to withdraw from Sugar Loaf. This would in turn cause Ushijima to withdraw from the Shuri Line and head south.

There were, of course, the personal stories as well. Stories of courage and of brutal deaths. The fact that men continued to try taking the hills while walking over the bodies of fallen enemies and fellow Marines still seems like an unbelievable nightmare. Conditions were unbearable. It was the rainy season, and that made the conditions for the living – and the dead – much worse. Tanks were bogged down, so supplies had to be brought to the front by hand. Dead bodies sunk in the mire and attracted flies, which was a continual reminder to the troops of what might be in store for them. Eugene Sledge, a member of the First Marine Division that was busy rolling up the other side of the Shuri Line, wrote about the horrible conditions that spring on Okinawa in With the Old Breed: “Cold rain caused the soldiers' skin to shrivel and whiten from exposure, while infiltrators ensured that few Marines ever caught more than a moment of rest. Incidences of combat fatigue soared.” Sledge, who had survived grisly combat at Peleliu, concluded that Okinawa's Wana Draw “was the most awful place conceivable for a man to be hurt or to die.”

Many of the men have expressed their belief that the nights were somehow the worst, yet often the most spectacular. Naval ships “softened up” the forward areas, while flares lit the night sky. In On the Point of the Spear, Jim White (29th Mar-3-G) writes about the night sky during May 1945. He recounts that the sky was lit by parachute flares, as both sides tried to turn the night into a usable battle field – allowing Americans and Japanese alike to look for enemy movement. Continues

White, “Since flares were point sources of light, the shadows those moving lights caused sometimes gave strange appearances to ordinary objects as the flares approached the ground.” The Marines were warned that if caught in the light, it was best to stay still. The time could seem much longer when one was so exposed! Night also meant that a Japanese soldier might sneak out of those interlocking caves to get behind American lines and kill Marines in their foxholes.

The aftermath of the battle for the Shuri Line left havoc in its wake. Eugene Sledge and the First Marine Division would end up occupying the area known as Half Moon, and the area seemed to Sledge like a living nightmare – a true No Man's land, except that this one was covered in dead bodies. Perhaps a better way to describe it would be a No Living Man's Land. The infantry units of the Sixth were decimated. Jim White's unit, for example, returned from Half Moon to Charlie Hill with only 20 men left out of some 240 who had landed. Only one officer was left and he had “cracked up.” That would be another price of the battle. Brutal conditions and endless days in continual peril left more than 1,000 men in the Sixth suffering from combat fatigue.

The last battle of the Pacific – Okinawa – will always be known for mud and death and trapped civilians and for Sugar Loaf. However, Asa Kawa, Wana Draw, Charlie Hill – and of course Half Moon and Horseshoe Hills – were also important in pushing the Japanese Thirty-Second Army off the Shuri Line and ultimately ending the Battle of Okinawa.

Message from the Membership Manager

I want to remind you of three subjects that are important to the Association:

- 1) Please be sure you are current in dues and newsletter payments.
- 2) Please notify me of your new address or you won't receive your copy of the "Striking Sixth." The Postal Service will not forward newsletters because they are not first class mail. I have an extreme number of folks whose addresses have been reported by the Postal Service as "Unknown" or "Unable to Forward." Anyone knowing a member who moved and did not advise me, please send me their name and new address.
- 3) Please notify Chaplain Harry McKnight (614-866-3456 or harrym1677@aol.com) and me (phone and e-mail below) when a member of the Association passes away. Harry needs the information so he can contact the member's family. I need to prepare the Taps list for the newsletter and the Memorial Service at the annual reunion. (Note: This is a good way to notify friends of the deceased.) I also need to keep the Association's records up to date.

Respectfully submitted,
